FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

LEHI COMES TOGETHER TO ENJOY LEHI EXPO

Residents Spend the Afternoon with City Officials to Learn More about Services

Lehi, Utah | April 25, 2013 – Hundreds of Lehi residents gathered at the Legacy Center Thursday evening for food, prizes, and the chance to learn more about city services. Lehi city officials from all city departments took advantage of the opportunity to set up exhibits and teach residents about the services that Lehi City provides.

The exhibits included live hawks, owls, and artifacts from the Hutchings Museum, fire truck tours with the fire department, and bucket rides with the power department. Residents also enjoyed free food and prizes provided by the city departments. City Council Member Kaye Collins said, “It’s an event that keeps growing every year. It’s exciting to have the residents come out every year and learn about the services the city provides.”

Most people immediately recognize the police department, fire department, and utility services provided by cities, but there are many city services that people may not understand. Lehi City uses the Lehi Expo to provide a yearly opportunity for residents and city officials from all departments to connect. City planners, engineers, and administrative service employees like the city administrator were on hand to answer questions and tell residents about what they do for the community.

“It’s great to see so many families turn out. I’m excited to see the residents learning so much about the services the city offers,” said Mayor Bert Wilson. City Administrator Derek Todd emphasized how grateful he is to have quality employees with significant expertise in their fields. “It is a great opportunity to have the employees take an afternoon to share their expertise with the community,” said Todd.

Lehi looks forward to the continued growth of the Lehi Expo in coming years.
